TransGlowUp

Your Transition Planner

Take what helps. Leave what doesn't.

A print-friendly version of the interactive transition checklist at transglowup.com. Check steps off as you go, skip or reorder anything — transition is not a test you have to pass.

This planner is an organizing tool, not medical advice. For care decisions, talk with qualified, affirming providers.
transglowup.com

Phase One: Listen inward

- Make space for self-discovery
  Journal, explore language, or simply notice what brings relief and joy.
- Explore trusted stories and resources
  Seek a range of trans and gender-expansive experiences—not a single script.
- Find an affirming therapist, if useful
  A therapist can support reflection; therapy is not a requirement for identity.

Phase Two: Build your circle

- Map a coming-out plan
  Choose who, when, where, and what backup you want—or decide not to come out.
- Build a support network
  Consider friends, family, peer groups, online spaces, or affirming community centers.
- Make a safety and privacy plan
  Think through housing, work, digital privacy, documents, and emergency contacts.

Phase Three: Explore care

- Research hormone therapy
  Review expected effects, timelines, fertility options, costs, and monitoring with a qualified clinician.
- Explore voice goals
  Try self-guided practice or an affirming speech-language professional; vocal health comes first.
- Research surgery, if it belongs on your path
  Compare qualified surgeons, outcomes, risks, recovery, letters, costs, and aftercare.

Phase Four: Shape daily life

- Explore presentation
  Clothes, hair, makeup, names, pronouns, binding, tucking, or none of these—choose comfort.
- Research name and gender-marker changes
  Requirements vary by state and document; start with your jurisdiction's official instructions.
- Plan ongoing care and celebration
  Schedule follow-ups, notice what feels better, and mark progress in ways that matter to you.

Made with care by TransGlowUp — transglowup.com
100% grassroots. Created by a trans woman, built for the community.